Government House

Government House, also known as Fanningbank, is the official residence of the Lieutenant Governor of Prince Edward Island, the personal representative in the province of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, the Queen of Canada.

In 1834 Government House was built with funds advanced through an issue of Treasury Notes to be repaid with monies raised for the purpose by an Assessment on Land. It cost, in the currency of the day, £3,142.17.3, and was intended to serve as a Vice-Regal residence for the Lieutenant Governors of the then British colony of Prince Edward Island.

The architectural design of the house is Georgian, with echoes of the Palladian tradition, and was the work of Isaac Smith. The wooden building was constructed by the architect in association with Henry Smith and Nathan Wright, a firm of local builders. The main structure is 95 feet long by 65 feet wide with two wings at the rear of the residence measuring 28 feet long by 25 feet wide, under which was placed a full Island sandstone foundation, most of which still supports the residence. The sills are 15 inches square and the floor joists are 4 inches by 11 inches and are laid 18 inches from center to center.

Government House is located on a parcel of land set aside by Governor Edmund Fanning in 1789 as Crown land, with the specific stipulation that it be used as the site for a residence for the Lieutenant Governor. The original parcel, known as Fanning Bank or Fanning's Bank, contained approximately 100 acres, and included farm land for the use of the incumbent. However, in 1876, part of the Government House property was given to the City of Charlottetown and is now known as Victoria Park. The remaining parcel of approximately 10 acres was retained for Government House and its grounds, and the property has been known more recently as Fanningbank. Upon completion of the building, the Lieutenant Governor of the day, Sir Aretas William Young, became its first occupant.

Walter Patterson is reported to have been born at Foxhall, County Donegal, Ireland in 1742. He fought with the British Army, 8th Regiment in America during the Seven Years War, at which time he rose to the rank of Captain. In 1758 the British had invaded the fortress of Louisburg for a second and final time, rounding up the French (Acadian) settlers on Prince Edward Island and had them deported. There were only about 300 Acadians remaining, mostly south of Malpeque Bay and also around Rustico and Souris, when the Island was formally awarded to Britain in 1763. In 1763 Island of St. John (Prince Edward Island) was formally created as a Colony.

In 1764, Patterson requested grants for some of the Island land. Three years later, as a result of the 1767 land lottery, he and his brother, John Patterson, became proprietors of Lot 19, located in the general area of the present town of Kensington. On 30th May 1769 the British Privy Council separated the St. John Island from its annexation with Nova Scotia and gave it a separate government. Patterson was appointed Governor of St. John Island (Prince Edward Island) on 14th July 1769, just a few weeks after the Island was officially made a separate colony. Governor Patterson arrived on the Island on 30th August 1770.

Upon his arrival, the Island population was somewhere in the vicinity of 300. Between 1770 and 1775 approximately 1,000 new settlers arrived on the Island mostly from Scotland. The capital, Charlottetown, existed only as a name on the map. In September of 1770, he took the Oath of Office, had an Executive Council sworn in, and began the actual task of administration. One of the early ordinances passed by the Governor and Council was to enforce the payment of quit rent.

In 1773 the first elections were held and the first Assembly met. Governor Patterson acquired in excess of 100,000 acres of land from proprietors who had not paid their quit rents and their lands were put up for sale. Proprietors who had their lands sold petitioned the British government asking to have their sold lots returned and, failing the return of the lots, then they asked to have Governor Patterson removed from office. Following the petitions from proprietors, the Secretary of State from the British government sent Patterson a dispatch on 24th July 1783 ordering him to present an enclosed bill to the Assembly, and for Patterson to recommend that the bill pass. The bill in question provided for the annulment of the 1771 land sales. Patterson refused to obey and he managed to obtain a majority decision of the Executive Council in support of his position. This was one of the main factors that forced the British government, on 17th June 1786, to inform Governor Patterson that he had been recalled and removed him from his position as Governor. In 1789, Patterson returned to England where he died on 6th September 1798.

Governor General Edmund Fanning, A.M., D.C.L., LL.D.

General Edmund Fanning was the second Governor of the Island St. John, then later called Prince Edward Island, since the creation of the Colony in 1763. Edmund Fanning was born in Long Island in 1737 and died in London, England, on 28th February 1818. He graduated from Yale in 1757 and settled as a lawyer in Hillsborough, North Carolina, where he was elected Colonel of Militia in 1763, Clerk of the Superior Court in 1765 and subsequently went to the Legislature. Among the offices held by him was that of Recorder of Deeds and it was alleged that to his abuses of this trust and his exorbitant charges was due to the rebellion of the regulators in Governor Tryon's administration. By his vicious character, "nearly all the estates in Orange County were loaded with doubts as to their titles and new and unnecessary deeds were demanded." Through his actions as Recorder, added to his zeal in quelling opposition to the severe exactions of the government and in bringing the leaders of that opposition to the scaffold, he became obnoxious to the people and, to escape the popular indignation, he accompanied Governor Tryon, who was his father-in-law, to New York as his Private Secretary in 1771.

He subsequently applied to the North Carolina Legislature, through Governor Martin, the successor of Governor Tryon, for reparation for losses from destruction of his property; but the petition was unanimously rejected and the governor was rebuked for presenting it and thus "trifling with the dignity of the House."

In 1774 Fanning received from the British government the lucrative office of Surveyor General as a reward for his services to the crown and his losses in North Carolina. In 1777, he raised and commanded a corps of 460 Loyalists, which bore the name of the "Associated Refugees" or "King's American Regiment." While his regiment was on Long Island, some of his men entered a house, tied the owner of it to a bedpost and held a candle under the ends of his fingers to force him to disclose the hiding place of his money. Fanning was equally severe towards all. During the war he was twice wounded and in 1779 his property was confiscated. He moved to Nova Scotia near the close of the war and was appointed Councilor and Lieutenant Governor on 23rd September 1783. Three years later, on 4th November 1786, he was appointed Governor of St. John Island (Prince Edward Island). This office he held for 18 years.

Fanning was made Major General in the British army in 1793, Lieutenant General in 1799 and General in 1808. The degree of A.M. was given him by Harvard in 1764 and by Kings in 1772; the degree of D.C.L. by Oxford in 1774 and that of LL.D. by both Yale and Dartmouth in 1803. His brother, Thomas, of Suffolk County, New York, delivered the address before Governor Tryon in November 1776 and was deputed to present the submission of the committee of that County. In June of 1778, Fanning was captured and carried off by a party of Whigs.

Governor Joseph Frederick Wallet DesBarres

Governor from 10th May 1804 to 5th August 1812

Joseph Frederick Wallet DesBarres was the third Governor of Prince Edward Island since the creation of the Colony in 1763. During his long life, covering the last half of 18th century and the early part of the 19th century, J. F. W. DesBarres was to witness many of the dramatic events which made up the history of Nova Scotia during these times. He was an army officer, military engineer, surveyor, colonizer and colonial administrator.

Joseph Frederick Wallet DesBarres is thought to have been born at Basel, Switzerland, in 1721 and was a member of a Huguenot family. His parents were Joseph-Leonard Vallet DesBarres and Anne-Catherine Cuvier; he was the eldest of three children. After an educational grounding in mathematics in the schools of Switzerland, DesBarres, like so many young Huguenot men, left Europe for England. He enrolled in the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich. At Woolwich, DesBarres was trained as a military engineer which, as such, was to give him a superior knowledge of the building of fortifications and of how to destroy them; his training at Woolwich was to also give him a solid grounding in land surveying and in the preparation of maps.

With England and France having declared war on one another (The Seven Years War, 1756-63), Lieutenant DesBarres was sent off to the North America Theatre, which, as a practical matter, was the only theatre for this particular war. In 1757, it seems, he was operating in the area which we now know as upstate New York (Lake St. George); but, in 1758, he was to be with Amherst at the Siege of Louisbourg. He then went with Wolfe to Quebec in 1759. By 1761 DesBarres was at Halifax. In April of 1762, news was heard at Halifax that St. John's, Newfoundland, had been attacked and captured by the French. Because of this there was a frenzy of activity at Halifax: batteries were added to those already in existence on George's Island, more were erected at Point Pleasant and near the Dockyard, the walls of the eastern redoubt at Dartmouth were repaired, and a boom of "timber and iron" was bolted, shore to shore, at the mouth of the Northwest Arm. DesBarres, being the military engineer that he was, was in the thick of this activity. In September an English force was launched from Halifax, of which DesBarres was a part, aimed at St. John's, which, in short order, was retaken by the British. It was during this time that DesBarres worked with James Cook, who was to learn much from DesBarres, in the Admiralty business of charting the coasts of Newfoundland. On his return to Halifax, DesBarres was charged by the Admiralty to make accurate surveys and charts of the coast and harbours of Nova Scotia. This was to lead to an effort which was to continue for a number of years and to the eventual publication of The Atlantic Neptune. It was for this work that DesBarres was to take his place in the history books. The Atlantic Neptune, was a magnificent contribution to hydrography and a classic of the minor arts.

DesBarres was to take his leave of Nova Scotia sailing from Halifax for England during October of 1773. He was to leave behind, there at Castle Frederick, his common law wife, Mary Cannon (known to her intimates as "Polly") and the five children born to them. In England, incidently, he was to take up with another, Martha Williams; but, yet, DesBarres was to keep up correspondence with his "beloved friend," Mary Cannon. More children, indeed eleven children were to come of the DesBarres/Williams union.

DesBarres was not to see Nova Scotia again until 1784. During this time in England (1773-84) he saw to the publication of his Atlantic Neptune. While there, in England, he developed his connections, such that, in 1784, Lord Sydney, there having been a determination that Cape Breton was to have a separate administration, was to appoint DesBarres as its new Governor. DesBarres arrived at Halifax from England during 1784, and, within a few weeks, he was off to take up his duties in Cape Breton. He was to spend time both at St. Peters and at Louisbourg. Though, given its history, Louisbourg might well have been chosen as the capital of the Cape Breton colony, DesBarres, for his own reasons, determined to relocate to Spanish Bay. His new capital was to be renamed, Sydney. He arrived there, at Sydney, on 7th January 1785. He came by sailing ship (the Blenheim) stepping off with 129 persons, the nucleus of a new English settlement. Within two years, after a stormy administration, DesBarres was relieved of his post. The storm revolved around a turf fight that DesBarres had with the local army commander, Colonel John Yorke.

In 1799 the name for St. John Island was changed to Prince Edward Island. An Act for altering and changing the name of this Island, from St. John to that of Prince Edward Island was presented to the Council on 26th November 1798, was approved and received Royal Assent on 1st February 1799.

In 1794 DesBarres was made Lieutenant Colonel; and, in 1798, full Colonel. In 5th May 1804, after kowtowing in London for sixteen years, DesBarres, notwithstanding his old age, was appointed the Governor of Prince Edward Island. DesBarres was to hold onto his governorship of Prince Edward Island longer than he did of that of Cape Breton; though, similar problems led to his recall. He made a public display of his dislike of the Chief Justice of the province; and, in any event, the authorities, no doubt, figured it was time that the ninety year old governor ought to be replaced, particularly since war had broken out with the United States of America. In 1812, DesBarres left Prince Edward Island and lived for a period of time on his lands at Amherst where he lived until he moved to Halifax in 1817. At Halifax he continued on and lived to the ripe old age of 103.

Governor Charles Douglass Smith

Charles Douglass Smith was the fourth Governor of Prince Edward Island since the creation of the Colony in 1763. Governor Charles Douglass Smith was born in 1761 in England. He was the eldest son of John Smith and Mary Wilkinson and in 1790 he married Frances Woodcock and they had at least four sons and four daughters.

His military career started when he entered the 1st Horse as a cornet in 1776 and later transferred to the 22nd Light Dragoons as a lieutenant in 1779. He also served for a time in the Thirteen Colonies and became a captain in 1782, but was placed on half pay when the regiment was disbanded the following year. In 1795, he resumed active service in the 32nd Light Dragoons and in 1796 transferred to the 21st Light Dragoons but was again placed on half pay in 1798. He had risen in the army to become major in 1794 and a lieutenant-colonel in 1798. His brother, William Sydney Smith, had influence with Lord Bathurst, the Secretary of State for War and the Colonies and in 1812 Lord Bathurst was seeking “an active and efficient officer” to replace Joseph Frederick Wallet DesBarres as Governor for Prince Edward Island and Smith was appointed Governor on 5th August 1812.

Smith arrived in Halifax, Nova Scotia, on 29th December and remained in Halifax for the remainder of the winter. He assumed control of the government on 24th July 1813. Governor Smith convened the General Assembly in November of 1813. The Assembly would not approve his revised Militia Act and, for the following two years, he fought in vain to have the local garrison under his command. When his authority to revise the militia regulations was challenged and a number of militia units refused to obey his orders during a parade on 2nd November 1815, he ordered George Wright, a militia officer, to punish his men for insubordination. Wright resigned his commission rather than carry out this order. Smith tried to dismiss him from the Council as well as the new Chief Justice, Thomas Tremlett, for refusing to “do his duty” in quelling the disturbances, and when Captain Charles Barrington, whom Smith had instructed “to have his ammunition ready” would not use the regular troops against the militia, Smith placed him under arrest. In 1816, Barrington was released and Sir John Coape Sherbrooke, Commander of the Forces in the Atlantic region, who reduced the local garrison from a company to a mere 22 men because of Smith’s tendency “to interfere unsuccessfully with the troops.” This action served merely to increase Smith’s fears. He compelled the militia to mount a permanent guard, winter and summer, outside the officer’s barracks, which he had sequestered upon his arrival for an official residence, and he repeatedly appealed, without success, for a larger garrison to protect him against threats that appear to have existed only in his mind.

In June of 1820 Smith called another general election but when the Assembly met on 25th July 1820 and prepared an address criticizing his arbitrary actions, he prorogued the House on 10th August and proclaimed “there is no necessity for calling a General Assembly for years.” Because of the productivity of various permanent revenue acts placed at the government’s disposal many years earlier, the Provincial Treasury had a steady increasing surplus. By the end of his tenure the Island Council had become, as his critics alleged, a body lacking “weight and influence.”

Smith treated the Island as if it were a large country estate and its people as if they were his tenants. He tackled the land question in such a clumsy way that he provided the proprietors with additional reasons to argue that they were justified in not living up to their commitments because of the misgovernment of the Island, and thus he may have delayed a more substantial reform of the landholding system.

When Thomas Heath Haviland received latter appointments and applied for a leave of absence, Smith forced him to appoint his son, Henry, who was not yet 19, as his deputy. Smith's son-in-law, John Edward Carmichael, would become Acting Receiver General of quit rents; Colonial Secretary; Registrar and the Clerk of the Council. Another son-in-law, Ambrose Lane, was appointed Registrar and Master of the Court of Chancery and was given a seat on the Council. Son, John Spencer Smith, became Collector of Impost and son, George Sidney Smith, acted as his father's Private Secretary. Toward the end of his career on Prince Edward Island, Smith became a recluse, surrounded by his relatives and a handful of sycophants. Smith died on 19th February 1855 in Dawlish, England.

Governor Colonel John Ready

Colonel John Ready was the fifth Governor of Prince Edward Island since the creation of the Colony in 1763. Governor John Ready was born in England in 1777. In 1796 he entered the British army as an ensign. In 1804 he married Susanna Bromley and had four children. He served on the Duke of Richmond's staff as a Lord Lieutenant and in 1818 accompanied the Duke to Canada and continued to serve as the Duke's Military Secretary and later as his Civil Secretary.

On 19th April 1824 he was appointed Governor for Prince Edward Island. The Island legislature had not sat since 1820 because of difficulties between the former Governor Smith and the elected House of Assembly. One of Ready's first acts was to dissolve the Assembly and call a general election. Governor Ready's wife passed away in March of 1825 and three of his four children died within the next two years. Personal tragedy did not deter the Governor who traveled the Island inspecting new roads and bridges. During this period of time, there was division between the Legislative Assembly and the Legislative Council pertaining to expenditure matters and Governor Ready, with the help of the Colonial Office, resolved this issue by the passing of the 1829 Appropriations Bill. Ready urged the legislators to deal only with "essential" matters in the first session. Money was appropriated for road and bridge building and the support of schools. At the beginning of Ready's term of office there remained in the treasury a considerable balance of funds that his predecessor had not used. It was with these funds, and those granted by the Assembly, that Ready was able to undertake a generous program of road and bridge building. During the summer he made numerous tours of the Island to tour the work completed and to make plans for additional construction. Ready's numerous visits and travels throughout the colony had a deep and positive impact on Islanders.

The Island was served well by Governor Ready however in June of 1830 the Colonial Office advised Governor Ready that he was to be replaced. In April of 1831 the Royal Gazette observed, "perhaps no public officer ever retired from so elevated a station, more unfeignedly and generally regretted."

The day after his departure in October of 1831, the same newspaper concluded that he would always be remembered as a gentleman "endeared to our recollection by qualities of his heart and his numerous acts of unostentatious benevolence ... by his general conciliatory deportment in the exercise of his official duties and in (his) ... social life."

In August there was news that his successor, Sir Murray Maxwell, had died in England and shortly thereafter Sir Aretas William Young was appointed as the Governor. The following year, Ready was appointed Governor of the Isle of Man and was sworn in 1832. In 1836 he married again, to Sarah Tobin, and they had two children. In 1841 he was promoted to Major General and he remained as Governor until his death. He was buried with full military honours at Malew, Isle of Man, on 17th July 1845.

Sir Murray Maxwell

June 1830 to August 1830

Little is known about Sir Murray Maxwell, other than he was to replace Governor Colonel John Ready following the completion of his term in June of 1830. However, in August there was news that the successor, Sir Murray Maxwell, had died in England.

Shortly thereafter Sir Aretas William Young was appointed as Governor for Prince Edward Island.

With the untimely death of Sir Murray Maxwell, Sir Aretas William Young became the sixth Governor of Prince Edward Island since the creation of the Colony in 1763. He married Sarah Cox, of Coolcliffe, Wexford, England, and they had several children, one of whom was Sir Henry Edward Fox Young, Governor of South Australia (1848-1855) and Tasmania (1855-1861).

Sir Aretas William Young, British soldier, was born about 1778. He entered the army in 1795 as ensign, was captain in the 13th foot in 1796 and served in Ireland during the Rebellion of 1798. In 1801, he was on duty in Egypt and in 1807, he was advanced to the rank of major in the 47th Regiment. Subsequently, he was engaged in many battles of the Peninsular War and from 1813 he served in the West Indies as Lieutenant-Colonel, chiefly at Trinidad.

In 1815 he was sent to join the expedition against Guadaloupe and received one of the badges of the Order of Merit from Louis XVIII. He was next placed in command of the troops in Grenada and, on his being ordered back to Trinidad, the Council of Assembly presented him with a sword valued at 100 guineas. From this time to the final disbandment of the 3rd West Indian Regiment in 1825 he administered the government at various times during the absence of Sir Ralph Woodford and was rewarded for the “candor, integrity and impartiality which had marked his administration” by 150 guineas for a sword and plate valued at £250. In 1826, he was appointed protector of slaves in Demerara (Trinidad). Young was appointed Governor of Prince Edward Island on 26th July 1831, a position he occupied until his death in office at Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island on 1st December 1835. In 1834 he was knighted.

George Wright filled in as Administrator for the period of time following Governor Young’s death (1st December 1835) until the appointment of Sir John Harvey on 30th August 1836.

John Harvey was the seventh Governor of Prince Edward Island since the creation of the Colony in 1763. John Harvey was born in England on 23rd April 1778. He entered the British army in 1794 and rose slowly through the ranks because he did not have the private wealth which would have enabled him to purchase promotions. He served in the Netherlands, France, Ceylon and Egypt. From 1803 to 1807, he was in India. In 1813, Harvey, now a Lieutenant Colonel, came to Upper Canada and saw action in the War of 1812.

His future became uncertain after 1815, but in 1828 he managed to obtain the appointment of Inspector General of Police in the Irish Province of Leinster. On 30th August 1836 he was appointed Governor of Prince Edward Island, moving to New Brunswick the following year. He was recalled from New Brunswick because of his handling of the Maine boundary dispute, but was appointed Governor of Newfoundland in 1841.

The political situation in Newfoundland was troubled and volatile. Harvey was in part responsible for the revised constitution introduced in 1842, which amalgamated the two houses of the Legislature and he deliberately implemented a policy of conciliation and fairness. He ensured that the Roman Catholics received government patronage and were represented on the council and persuaded Bishop Fleming to withdraw from politics. At the same time, he managed to maintain the support of Conservatives, helping the Chamber of Commerce in its efforts to obtain better postal and steamship services, reforming the police force and actively promoting the development of agriculture. In short, Harvey gave the colony a political respite between storms of the 1830s and the bitter divisions surrounding the campaign for Responsible Government that was just beginning as he left.

In August of 1846 Harvey became Governor of Nova Scotia. He died in Halifax on 22nd March 1852.

In 1823, he married Carolina Elisa (daughter of Sir William Plomer) and they had four sons and one daughter.

Governor Sir Alexander Bannerman

Sir Alexander Bannerman was the eleventh Governor of Prince Edward Island since the creation of the Colony in 1763. Bannerman was born in Aberdeen, Scotland on 7th October 1788, the eldest son of Thomas Bannerman. He received a grammar school education and attended Marischal College in Aberdeen. Bannerman made his reputation and money running the family wine business after his father's death in 1820. Bannerman was also involved in banking, whaling, an iron foundry and a cotton mill. In 1832, he became MP for Aberdeen and continued to sit as a Whig until he retired in early 1847, never having faced a serious challenger.

On 14th January 1825, in London, Bannerman married Margaret Gordon who was born in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island. Ms. Gordon was the granddaughter of Margaret Hyde and Walter Patterson, the Island's first Governor. Bannerman was knighted in February 1851 prior to his departure to Prince Edward Island where he was appointed Governor on 10th March 1851 and during his term of office he instituted Responsible Government. In 1854, he was appointed Governor of the Bahamas and in 1857 became Governor of Newfoundland.

Bannerman's term began in the midst of heated negotiations between the colony, France and Britain regarding French fishing rights along the French shore. Bannerman found the Newfoundland government, under John Kent, unreasonable in its dealings and corrupt. He argued that undeserving people received relief aid and that funds were misappropriated. Characteristically, Bannerman tried to fix the problems. During the 1859 elections, he called for an enquiry into election procedures at Harbour Grace and Burin after reports of disorderly conduct took 10 days to reach him. He also held an independent inquiry into reports of undue influence within the Assembly. The most sensational political drama ensued when Bannerman dissolved the government during a dispute over a currency bill when Premier John Kent questioned the Governor's authority. The dissolution resulted in a tense election of the opposition party to power and crowd violence in St. John's. Troops quieted the riots, however, and the government resumed its work. Bannerman ended his term in 1864.

Upon returning to London, Bannerman, who was planning to return to Aberdeen, contracted a bad cold and, weakened, fell down a flight of stairs. He died on 30th December 1864.

He entered the service of the Colonial Office in 1858 as private secretary to his elder brother, Sir Hercules Robinson, afterwards first Baron Rosmead, who was Lieutenant Governor of St. Kitts.

In 1862 he married Olivia Edith Dean, daughter of the Right Reverend Thomas Stewart Townshend, Bishop of Meath. They had three sons and two daughters.

In 1866 he was appointed Governor of the Falkland Islands and then on 10th June 1873 he was appointed as Governor for the Province of Prince Edward Island. It was during his administration, and partly as a result of his judicious counsels, that the inclusion of Prince Edward Island in the Canadian Confederation took place on 1st July 1873.

He was created a Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George (C.M.G.) in 1873, a Knight Commander of St. Michael and St. George (K.C.M.G.) in 1877 and a Knight, Grand Cross of St. Michael and St. George (G.C.M.G.) in 1887.

Sir Robert Hodgson was the fifteenth Lieutenant Governor of Prince Edward Island since the creation of the Colony in 1763. Robert Hodgson was born at Charlottetown in 1798, the eldest son of Robert Hodgson, esquire, (formerly Speaker of the Prince Edward Island Assembly) and Rebecca, daughter of Lieutenant Colonel Joseph Robinson of the South Carolina Royalist Regiment. He completed his education at King's College in Windsor, Nova Scotia. Hodgson studied law with Simon Bradstreet Robie and James W. Johnston in Halifax, Nova Scotia and was called to the bars in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island in 1819. In 1827 he married Fanny Macdonald, daughter of the late Captain Ranald Macdonald of the Glengarry Light Infantry and Town Major of Charlottetown. Hodgson took residence in Charlottetown and took up an active career as a lawyer, land agent and politician. They had two sons and one daughter. Hodgson did not remarry after his wife died on 2nd May 1832.

Robert Hodgson entered public life in 1824 by successfully contesting an Assembly seat for Charlottetown. He was appointed Attorney General and Advocate General Surrogate and Judge of Probate for Prince Edward Island in May of 1828 on an interim basis. A year later, the appointments became permanent and he resigned his Assembly seat. He was then appointed to the Executive Council and the Legislative Council and became President of the Legislative Council in 1840 and Acting Chief Justice in 1841. In 1850, during a crisis in the struggle for Responsible Government when it seemed as though the Reformers might assume office, they offered to allow Hodgson to retain the office of Attorney General and his seat on the Executive Council if he would join them. He declined, and when the Reformers did take power in 1851 he resigned from both positions. He remained President of the Legislative Council for one more year. The Executive Council of George Coles appointed Hodgson to the vacant Chief Judgeship in 1852. He administered the government of Prince Edward Island from July to December 1865, October 1868 to October 1870 and from August 1873 until 4th July 1874 when he was appointed Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Prince Edward Island a position he held until 1879. In January of 1869 he was knighted. Hodgson retired in 1879 and died in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, on 15th September 1880.

Sir Robert Hodgson was a longtime office seeker; in fact, his indefatigable quest for offices, honours, and pensions more than once betrayed a lack of taste. Nonetheless, he was undeniably a man of distinction in the history of Prince Edward Island. He was the first native Chief Justice, the first native Lieutenant Governor, and the first Islander to be knighted. When he died, the Patriot newspaper described him as, "An excellent specimen of the English gentleman... he will long be remembered as the Good Sir."

He emigrated with his parents to P.E.I. in 1839 and was educated at the Central Academy, Charlottetown. He became a merchant and shipowner interested in the fisheries. He made substantial gifts for charitable and education purposes. After losing a daughter to tuberculosis, Dalton became interested in the fight against TB on P.E.I. Definition of “Administrator”

In the Past . . .

In the Lieutenant Governor’s absence, the Administrator would carry out routine business of the Lieutenant Governor’s office. Prior to Confederation the acting Administrator chaired meetings of Council, sent reports to the British Colonial Office, acknowledged, dispatched and forwarded petitions and papers.

The Constitution Act (1967 - 1982) in section 67, states as follows:

"The Governor General in Council may from time to time appoint an Administrator to execute the office and functions of the Lieutenant Governor during his absence, illness or other inability."

Currently . . .

In the absence of the Lieutenant Governor (either through out-of-province commitments or if there were unforeseen time lapses between Lieutenant Governors terms of office) the practice has been for the Federal Cabinet to appoint the Chief Justice as Administrator.

Administrator Phillips Callbeck

Administrator from 1775 - 1779

Phillips Callbeck was born in 1744 with little known about his early life, although family tradition suggests he was born and educated in Ireland. He came to St. John Island in 1770 and in September of that year he was appointed to Governor Walter Patterson's first council. In the same year he became Attorney General and Surrogate General and Judge of Probate. Callbeck married Ann Coffin in 1772. He had a law practice as well, and Patterson, writing after the death of Chief Justice John Duport in May of 1774 noted that Callbeck's appointment to the position could not be allowed since it would leave the Island without a single lawyer. Callbeck also ran a mill and a store.

As Senior Councillor, Callbeck became Administrator in 1775 when Patterson left for England to fight for a commitment to funding the Island government. Callbeck had occupied the post for only four months when the colony was attacked in November by New England privateers. Charlottetown was looted and Callbeck, together with Surveyor General Thomas Wright, were taken as American prisoners from 8th December 1775 to 1776. Mr. Callbeck was released in Salem, Massachusetts and he was in Halifax by January 1776.

After his return to the Island in May, Callbeck attempted to improve the defensive state of the colony. He raised an independent company of militia and, as engineer, attended to the fortifications of the Island. But he overstepped his authority in the construction of defense works and was never able to raise the full complement of 100 men for the company. According to Chief Justice Peter Stewart, all this activity made for him "an independent fortune" in addition to his salaries as Administrator and Attorney General and profits made as the colony's principal merchant and storekeeper. Callbeck collected perquisites as acting engineer and militia colonel.

Governor Patterson returned to the colony in 1780 and the next year seized several townships for arrears in quit rents. Callbeck was among those who supported the action and who purchased land at the auction which followed in November 1781. The reaction of proprietors was strong and they pressured the British officials to reverse the move. Probably in the fall of 1783 Patterson received a draft bill from Lord North, Secretary of State for the Home Department, providing for the land's return to the original owners. Patterson put off introducing this legislation until he could secure an assembly more sympathetic to his own views. In the election held on March 1784 Callbeck ran unsuccessfully for an assembly seat, which resulted in a victory for the Country Party. A new election in March 1785 resulted in a more compliant assembly, and Callbeck assisted Patterson in forcing defeat of the draft bill in November 1786. Patterson then introduced a private members bill which returned all land to its original proprietors save that bought by Callbeck, Thomas DesBrisay, and Peter Stewart, provided that the 1781 purchases were compensated. In the same month Lieutenant Governor Edmund Fanning arrived to serve as acting governor in the place of Patterson, who was summoned by the Home Secretary to explain his actions. Patterson clung to office until June 1787, when he returned to England. Fanning, now governor, set about establishing his own factions.

Callbeck had no real place in the new government. He attended meetings of Council infrequently and, when present, obstructed the passage of motions and the conduct of business. Dropped from the Council by Fanning as a result, Callbeck was reinstated the same year, but he did not attend any more meetings. The summer of 1787 saw the election of an anti-Fanning assembly led by Captain Alexander Fletcher. Callbeck, who was elected as a member of Fletcher's party, was voted the speaker in January 1788. In London, the last of a series of events begun in 1781 was being played out before the Privy Council. Criminal charges against Patterson and the members of his administration were maintained, and in July 1789 Callbeck was removed from his seat on the council and dismissed as Attorney General. His death followed within a year on 21st February 1790 in Charlottetown.

Callbeck's career had been ruined by the land question, which would destroy many more before it was settled. He, like Patterson, had been judged harshly by historians, but he appears to have had a dedication to the struggling colony's interests as well as to his own. After his death the Assembly voted to place a monument on his grave as "grateful tribute to the General Benefactor of this Island."

Administrator Thomas DesBrisay

Administrator from 10th October 1779 to June 1780

Thomas DesBrisay was born in 1733 in Dublin (Republic of Ireland) and was the son of Theophilus DesBrisay and Magdalen de Vergese d'Aubussargues and in 1753 he married Ellen Landers (Landen) and they had 16 children.

Thomas DesBrisay was appointed an ensign in the 35th Foot (Donegall's) at the age of ten. He attained the rank of Captain in the Royal Irish Artillery on 7th February 1760. This career was terminated when, on 31st July 1769 he was commissioned Lieutenant Governor, Secretary and Registrar of St. John's (Prince Edward) Island. Ten years would lapse before he took up the appointment. Having acquired land on the Island, he busied himself for a few years with attempts to recruit settlers in Ireland. In 1773, however, the British government unwilling to encourage emigration, expressly forbade him to continue his efforts.

On 8th July 1771, apparently believing that DesBrisay was soon to arrive, Governor Walter Patterson had appointed DesBrisay a Justice of the Peace for Queens County. Three years later Patterson was to describe the absentee Lieutenant Governor as "very unfit to hold any offices under His Majesty." He charged that DesBrisay had attempted to interfere in the proper allocation of Colonial funds; moreover, he had mortgaged his properties and, without discharging the mortgages, sold parcels of land to prospective settlers who were subsequently ruined by the expense of a voyage from the British Isles and the loss of their purchase money, the deeds they had received from DesBrisay being of no effect. DesBrisay was nevertheless retained as Lieutenant Governor and in the summer of 1779 was ordered by the Secretary of State for the American Colonies to take up his appointment.

Because Patterson was absent from the colony when DesBrisay arrived on 10th October 1779 DesBrisay, as Senior Officer, assumed command. During a nine month period he granted some 400 crown lots in Charlottetown Royalty, apportioning 58 town lots and 58 pasture lots to himself and members of his family. The British Government considered his behavior sufficient grounds for dismissal but acquiesced in Patterson's proposal that instead DesBrisay and the others who had acquired the lots should be made to surrender the bulk of them to the Crown in open court. DesBrisay's role in this affair no doubt explains why the remarkable number of requests for preferment that he addressed to London went unanswered. His hatred for Patterson, who had exposed him, must have intensified in 1781 when the governor claimed for himself a large portion of the land sold in November because proprietors' failure to pay quit rents.

With the organization of the colonial administration in 1784 the office of Governor of St. John's (Prince Edward) Island was eliminated. Patterson, as a consequence, became Lieutenant Governor, and DesBrisay lost both his post and his seat on the Council. He was, however, appointed Clerk of the Council on 22nd January 1785. Unwilling to "sit, as clerk, at the foot of a Board where I was appointed by His Majesty President," he was permitted to exercise his duties as Deputy, and Charles Stewart was chosen for the position. The presence of a non-member Clerk at the Council meetings, a custom which was continued until DesBrisay's death, represented a departure from British tradition, and the Upper House of Prince Edward Island became unique in this respect. In 1789 DesBrisay was appointed to the Council by Lieutenant Governor Edmund Fanning.

Injured pride also figured in DesBrisay's resentment at Phillips Callbeck's being recommended in 1781 to command a company for the defense of the colony in preference to him, as former Chief Justice Peter Stewart's claim to precedence over him at Council's meetings in 1801, and William Townshend's being appointed temporary

Commander in Chief of the colony in 1813 to the exclusion of his own claim as senior councillor. As late as 1818, when DesBrisay was described as being “infirm and aged even to superannuation,” Lieutenant Governor Charles Douglass Smith remarked that “it would hurt the old man’s feelings much ever to be removed from the Council.”

Because of failing eyesight, DesBrisay had his grandson, Theophilus, assist him in the performance of the duties of Secretary and Registrar for some 15 years before his death. Thomas DesBrisay died in Prince Edward Island on 25th September 1819 at the age of 86.

In 1813 the partnership dissolved and he was left in control of the firm's brewery and mills at Bird Island (Wrights) Creek, near Charlottetown.

George Wright served as High Sheriff in 1810 and 1811. During the War of 1812 he was rapidly promoted from Captain of Militia to Major to Lieutenant-Colonel. In 1824 he became the JP (Justice of the Peace) with the rank of custos rotulorum, and an Assistant Judge of the Supreme Court in 1828. He was a prominent member of St. Paul's parish in Charlottetown, a founding member of the Central Agricultural Society (1827), and then its President in (1830).

He was appointed to Council on 10th June 1813, just prior to the arrival of Lieutenant Governor Charles Douglass Smith. In the early years of Smith's government Wright was regarded as an associate of James Bardin Palmer, and his defiance of Smith in 1815 over a militia disturbance led to Smith's unsuccessful attempt to dismiss him from Council. Throughout the controversies involving Smith in the early 20's Wright kept a low profile frequently absent from Council for critical meetings but generally supportive of the administration.

As Senior Member and President of Council, he found himself administering the colony from 10th December 1825 the first of several times he served as its Chief Executive Officer on an interim basis. The stewardship, during the absence of Smith's successor, John Ready, in England, lasted exactly one year. In his role as Administrator, Wright carried out routine business, chaired meetings of Council, sent reports to the Colonial Office, acknowledged dispatches and forwarded petitions and papers.

On 12th November 1827 the complex at Bird Island, consisting of a gristmill, sawmill, and distillery, all fitted with extensive machinery, was burnt to the ground by fire which started in the drying kiln. The structure was completely uninsured. In 1828, following the death of his brother Charles, the Surveyor General, George Wright, assumed his office - the third member of his family to hold this post!

Wright's stewardship, during the absence of Charles Douglass Smith's successor, Colonel John Ready, in England, lasted exactly one year from 10th December 1825 to 10th December 1826. Wright again served as Administrator from 19th May 1834 to 29th September 1834 while Lieutenant Governor Sir Aretas William Young visited England, and again from 2nd December 1835 to 30th August 1836 between Young's death and the arrival of Sir John Harvey. He served briefly again in 1837 and 1841 before and after the tenure of Sir Charles Augustus Fitzroy.

Hardly a major political figure on the Island, George Wright was an excellent exemplar of the prominence enjoyed by descendants of many of its early officers and of the perpetuation in certain position of what amounted to hereditary claims (the day after George Wright's death his son George was provisionally appointed surveyor general, the fourth member of the family to hold this position). George Wright died on 13th March 1842.

Administrator Ambrose Lane

Administrator from September and October 1847 and 18th October 1850 to 10th May 1851

It is believed that Ambrose Lane was born in 1791 in the County Tipperary (Republic of Ireland). He was the son of Colonel John Hamilton Lane. On 19th August 1817 he married Mary Smith, daughter of Lieutenant Governor Charles Douglass Smith and they had six children.

Ambrose Lane started his long military career in 1807 by joining the 99th Foot (renumbered 98th in 1815) as an ensign. He rose to the rank of Lieutenant in 1811 and in 1812 was posted to North America. Four years later he was given the command of a Subaltern's Detachment in Charlottetown. With the army reduction of 1818 he went on half pay and settled in Prince Edward Island where he took up his duties of Captain in the militia and, in 1819, Charlottetown Town Major.

In December 1818 Lieutenant Governor Charles Douglass Smith appointed Lane to the council and used him, along with another son-in-law, John Carmichael, to provide his administration with the independence from political factions he desired. Local politicians objected to this nepotism, which not only reduced their own role in government but also confirmed their suspicions of executive corruption. For example, as Registrar (1818), Examiner (1818) and Master (1919) of the Court of Chancery, Lane was in the happy position of setting his own fees as Registrar and then, as Master, ruling on any complaints these fees aroused. Lane's lack of qualifications for his judicial posts came under particular scrutiny as a blatant example of undue family influence.

In 1825 he lost his post as Master of Chancery, but he retained his other military and judicial posts as well as his seat in Council. From August 1828 to May 1829 he acted as the Island's Colonial Secretary and was appointed as an unpaid Assistant Justice of the Supreme Court in November 1829 under James Edward Jarvis. In 1831 he was promoted to the temporary rank of Captain on half pay in the regular army and became Sub-Inspector and District Adjutant in the local militia, posts he held until his death.

In Council, Lane remained staunchly Conservative, opposing advocates of escheat and responsible government and promoting proprietorial interests. When Lieutenant Governor Sir Charles Augustus Fitzroy created separate Legislative and Executive Councils in March 1839, Lane was excluded from both bodies, but by September, at Fitzroy's express request, he regained a seat at the Executive Council without loss of rank. From 1842 to 1853 he was the Council's senior member and as such twice served as the Island's Administrator, in September and October 1847 and during the temporary absence of Lieutenant Governor Sir Henry Vere Huntley, and from October 1850 to May 1851 between the terms of Sir Donald Campbell and Sir Alexander Bannerman. He also served on the Central Board of Health; was a trustee of the Central Academy; and became a founding member of the Central Agricultural Society.

Ambrose Lane died on 7th September 1853 in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island.

Administrator Charles Young

Administrator

25th May 1859 to 8th June 1859

Charles Young was born in Glasgow, Scotland on 30th April 1812, son of John Young, agricultural writer, born in Falkirk, Scotland in Sept. 1773. John Young and family emigrated from Scotland to Halifax, Nova Scotia in 1814 and was representative of Sydney in the provincial assembly from 1825 until his death on 6th October 1837.

Charles studied at Dalhousie College in Halifax where he took honours and entered the law office of his brothers George and William. In 1838 he was called to the bars of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, and, forming a co-partnership with his brothers, practiced for several years. On 23rd November 1847, he was the first barrister in Prince Edward Island to be appointed as Queen's Counsel. At the age of twenty-eight he entered the P.E.I. House of Assembly, and was soon transferred to the Legislative Council, where he sat for twenty-three years (during ten of which he was its president). From 29th May 1851 to 2nd May 1853 and again from 29th June 1858 to 11th April 1859 he held the position of Attorney General and he was also administrator of the government of Prince Edward Island for four years.

Like his brother William, Charles was a warm supporter of the policy of Responsible government and he was the first public man on the island to support that principle. In 1852 he received his appointment as judge of probate, and sixteen years later he became judge in bankruptcy. In March of 1875, Charles retired from the latter post. As a barrister he had a very large and lucrative practice, hardly a case of importance occurring in which he was not retained. In tenantry cases he was almost invariably retained by the tenants, and the peculiar land laws of the island found always in him a ready and logical interpreter. He frequently delivered public lectures, and the Mechanics' Institute of Charlottetown owes to him its foundation. As of 1845 he was a warm temperance advocate and he had been a local preacher of the Methodist church for many years. In 1854 Charles Young was granted rank and precedence under Governor Sir Alexander Bannerman thus making him a councillor, a senior member and president of the Legislative Council. In 1858 the Queen offered him the dignity of knighthood, which he declined.

Administrator and, later, Lieutenant Governor
Sir Robert Hodgson, LL.B.

Administrator from July to December 1865, 22nd October 1868 to 6th October 1870 and from August 1873 until 4th July 1874, and Lieutenant Governor from 14th July 1874 to 14th July 1879

Sir Robert Hodgson was the fifteenth Lieutenant Governor of Prince Edward Island since the creation of the Colony in 1763. Robert Hodgson was born at Charlottetown in 1798, the eldest son of Robert Hodgson, esquire, formerly Speaker of the Prince Edward Island Assembly and Rebecca, daughter of Lieutenant Colonel Joseph Robinson of the South Carolina Royalist Regiment. He completed his education at King's College in Windsor, Nova Scotia. Hodgson studied law with Simon Bradstreet Robie and James W. Johnston in Halifax, Nova Scotia and was called to the bars in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island in 1819. In 1827 he married Fanny Macdonald, daughter of the late Captain Ranald Macdonald of the Glengarry Light Infantry and Town Major of Charlottetown. Hodgson took residence in Charlottetown and took up an active career as a lawyer, land agent and politician. They had two sons and one daughter. Hodgson did not remarry after his wife died on 2nd May 1832.

Robert Hodgson entered public life in 1824 by successfully contesting an Assembly seat for Charlottetown. He was appointed Attorney General and Advocate General Surrogate and Judge of Probate for Prince Edward Island in May of 1828 on an interim basis. A year later, the appointments became permanent and he resigned his Assembly seat. He was then appointed to the Executive Council and the Legislative Council and became President of the Legislative Council in 1840 and Acting Chief Justice in 1841. In 1850, during a crisis in the struggle for Responsible Government, when it seemed as though the Reformers might assume office, they offered to allow Hodgson to retain in the office of Attorney General and his seat on the Executive Council if he would join them. He declined, and when the Reformers did take power in 1851 he resigned from both positions. He remained President of the Legislative Council for one more year.

The Executive Council of George Coles appointed Hodgson to the vacant Chief Judgeship in 1852. He administered the Government of Prince Edward Island from July to December 1865, October 1868 to October 1870 and from August, 1873 until 4th July 1874 when he was appointed Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Prince Edward Island a position he held until 1879. In January of 1869 he was knighted. Hodgson retired in 1879 and died in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, on 15th September 1880.

Sir Robert Hodgson was a longtime office seeker; in fact, his indefatigable quest for offices, honours, and pensions more than once betrayed a lack of taste. Nonetheless, he was undeniably a man of distinction in the history of Prince Edward Island. He was the first native Chief Justice, the first native Lieutenant Governor (Lieutenant Governor No. 15 for the province), and the first Islander to be knighted. When he died, the Patriot newspaper described him as, "An excellent specimen of the English gentleman... He will long be remembered as the Good Sir."
